

National Republican.

The following extract from a letter, received by a gentleman of high standing in this community, contains much that is interesting and important in relation to the affairs of our sister Republic of Mexico. It was written by a legal gentleman, who is in a position to obtain early and reliable information.

San Luis Potosi, Feb. 19, 1864.

I have the pleasure also of forwarding to you the latest items from the interior of our Republic, in order that you may know the state of things there.

But a few hours since positive intelligence arrived here of the storming of Guadalupe, by the division of the Constitutional army, under the command of Gen. Don Jose Lopez Uraga. The city of Guadalupe was captured by a very respectable force of French and Mexican troops, and was attacked by the Liberal army, under the orders of Gen. Uraga and Gen. Bercebal, and after a bloody and bloody battle the town was obliged to surrender, leaving in our possession 35 cannon and more than 700 prisoners, and an immense amount of war materials.

The loss of men was not so great as expected, in consequence of the cowardice of the clergy party, who abandoned their forts, and because the troops are opposed to the French invasion, and are both to fight against their countrymen.

This misfortune to the French and their allies has resulted in an attempt on the part of the French troops, who occupied Zatecas, to move towards the city of Mexico. Gen. Gonzalez Ortega and Miguel Negrete have united a considerable force, say 15,000 men. The latter are determined to attack and take the city.

Gen. Puebla has joined Gonzalez Ortega with 5,000 cavalry, and it appears that things are about to take a favorable turn. General Don Porfirio Blas de Leon, Doblado and Negrete all appear to be striking a deadly blow at the infamous regime. All, however, are resolved to obey to the last the legitimate authority of the Republic, Don Benito Juarez. All are determined to fight to the death to the rule of the vile traitors who wish to see us under the iron heel of a European despot.

In this city we have the demon Mejia, with about 5,000 men, all badly armed, and he is kept in constant alarm, as a force under Gen. Alcala is at Vera Cruz, threatening the city. Relative to Vidauri, I must say that he has thrown off the mask and is trying to preserve his position by siding with the traitors. Doblado has started from Saltillo with a sufficient number of good troops to take Monterrey, the government seat of the traitor Governor. In compliance with his son-in-law, Vidauri, he has given permission to the rebels to transport cotton, in any quantity, through his territory, of which they largely avail themselves. A consignment of 600 bales happened along when they were short of funds, it was seized and sold, and payment to the rebels refused.

Cortina, Governor of Coahuila, received an invitation from Vidauri, requesting him to second his movement. This invitation was answered in the most indignant style, and Cortina has begun his preparations to march against him with a splendid force of regular men, resolved, all of them, to die rather than acknowledge the treason of the Governor of New Leon.

By order of President Juarez, the State of Coahuila had been separated from New Leon. It will be remembered that this State had, for a number of years, been a part of the latter, through the intrigue and ambition of Don Santiago Vidauri.

The city of Puebla was, according to last accounts, besieged by the liberal army, under Porfirio Diaz and General, and expected to fall, there being no reinforcements expected in aid of the enemy. The French find that Mexico will not so easily fall under their rule. We all wish that the liberal army would be over, and every true Mexican wishes that the public to help us. We will hold out as long as we have a man and a musket with which to oppose the invader.—N. O. Rev. 1864.
